This flapping noise comes from the wind blowing from the other side of the house. This pressurises the house a bit on one side, and depressurises it on the side of the exhaust hood. With gusts of wind, that causes air to actually move from the house out through this exhaust duct. There are a couple of things that can help to reduce the problem.

And on occasion a hard driving rain with whipping wind will cause roof vents to leak water. If your roof vent leaks during heavy rain, the rain may be blowing up under the hood and into the vent. If this is the case, you need to create a breathable shield to slow the driving rain drops while still allowing air flow.
